technical and popular report.

Site-specific information was compiled for both historic and prehistoric sites from state agencies in Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, and from various local and regional institutions. More than 1,000 historically or architecturally significant sites and districts and, more than 1,400 prehistoric archaeological components were recorded and plotted on base maps. From the site configurations and from other data collected during the course of the records and literature review, a narrative framework for the interpretation of historic and prehistoric sites was developed. Recommendations to enhance the management of the archaeological and historical data base were provided. The bibliography is arranged in five sections: (1) Archaeology & Environmental Bibliography; (2) Historic Sources Bibliography; and the third, fourth, and fifth sections refer to periodicals, archive files, and maps.

INTRODUCTION:

The following bibliographic references are arranged in five separate sections. In part, this arrangement is functional in that the sections reflect materials that refer to particular topical matter and represent different format forms. However, it should be noted that the bibliographic materials were collected by different individuals who had distinctly different interests and responsibilities during the course of this data compilation. The first bibliographic section refers primarily to information relevant to the archaeology of the project area as well as a number of general references relating to environment, geology, geography, and other topics of similar vein. These citations were collected by Mr. Robert Boszhardt and myself in an attempt to summarize the regional prehistory.

The second bibliographic section was compiled by Mr. Robert Fay whose general interests and responsibilities were the historic period information sets. Needless to say, there was a great deal of overlap in the first two bibliographies as Mr. Fay did not restrict himself only to historical phenomena. Appropriately, Mr. Fay also dealt with Euro-American and industrial sites and locations and noted both the historical as well as the archaeological potentials of the loci he investigated.

Finally, the third, fourth, and fifth sections refer to periodicals consulted, archive files, and maps. Again, the overlap between historical and archaeological utility of these data files is apparent. In summary, the first section relates primarily to prehistory and the physical setting of the project region; the second section reflects citations important to understanding the historical contexts of the study area; and the third through fifth sections reference periodical and archive sources that contain both archaeological and historical information sets.
